

Online Office

Forms

Marketing

Tech Help

Realtor Store

infoXchange

My

Help | My Account

FAR Business | Benefits | Education | Events | Legal | Legislative | Magazine |

Search the Site

Powered by the Florida Association of Realtors

L

Planet Realtor > Florida > News > Daily

Headlin

REALTOR RESOURCES

Forms Basic

Find Florida Properties

Tech Helpline

Online Legal Hotline

Florida Realtor Magazine

Legislative Action Center

Realtor Store

Message Boards

SITE SUPPORT

Site Map

Newsletter Preferences

Help

Terms of Service

Privacy Policy

Despite law, condo owners in a battle to install shutters

Vol. 11, Issue 20

MIAMI -- June 12, 2006 -- Just because Florida law says condo owners are allowed to install shutters doesn't mean you can just go out and install them.

Housing Ma
Indicato

That's what many condo owners are finding this hurricane season.

Florida existing sales: -24%

The law says condo associations can specify colors or styles of shutters, but can't ban them, even if the buildings have hurricane-resistant glass.

Florida existing condo sales: -31%

Most associations, experts say, are quickly setting standards. Some, especially those nearest the Atlantic, are going even further and making shutters mandatory because it's the only way they can get insurance.

Florida existing median price: \$256,400

But other associations are taking their time making decisions.

Florida existing condo median \$222,900

It took Joe Campanella six months to get approval to put shutters on his 20th floor apartment in the WaterGarden Condominium on the New River in downtown Fort Lauderdale.

Florida consum confidence: 86

He called it a frustrating wait "that no condo owner should have to go through because boards should know the law says they can't refuse."

30-year fixed r mortgage: 6.71%

After putting in his request in September, Campanella's board told him shutters would disturb the appearance of the 315-unit, two-year-old building.

National existii home sales: -6.6%

And besides, the board said, shutters weren't necessary because the building has hurricane-resistant glass.

National existii home median \$230,000

Campanella then asked for help from the state condo ombudsman.

Pending home index 116.2

"It is clear from the statute that you may install hurricane shutters despite the fact that you have impact resistant glass," replied Dr. Virgil Rizzo on Sept. 24. "Your association board may not refuse to grant you permission provided that the shutters conform to the association's adopted specifications and the shutters and installation comply with the applicable building code."

National consu confidence: 105.7

National new h sales:

Believing "the law is the law" and the board would obey, Campanella ordered shutters.

A month later, Hurricane Wilma pounded the area and "the hurricane-resistant windows didn't turn out to be resistant," he said.

Sixty windows leaked, including those in his apartment. Water went about 6 feet into his unit. It was 3 inches deep in others.

By then he wasn't alone asking for shutters. Still, the board refused to set standards. The hurricane-resistant glass was good enough, the board told owners.

"They told us all 60 windows were damaged by 'flying missiles' [debris] coming from nearby buildings," he said.

In November, the board made a formal request to the state Department of Business & Professional Regulation for an interpretation of the shutter law. The department enforces state condo law.

In February, the department ordered WaterGarden to adopt specifications and "allow individual unit owners to install hurricane shutters."

In March, six months after his request, the board set the standards. Campanella's $7,000 shutters were installed on March 10.

Bill Beckett, president of the association, said the board wasn't stalling.

"We were concerned about the aesthetics of the building. That's the reason we were looking at all options," he said. "We had to investigate and find out what was best ... Boards need to do their homework."

After studying the options, the board decided "we want shutters because they are tried and true," he said.

Robert Kaye, a Fort Lauderdale attorney whose firm represents 470 South Florida condo and homeowner associations, said insurance companies are requiring associations in the eastern areas to install shutters in units as well as common areas.

"A lot of our clients are being told by the few insurance companies left that if they haven't fully secured their buildings by early next year, insurance won't be available to them," he said.

Some associations are requiring individual owners to get shutters. In others, he said, owners by majority vote are making shutters a common expense so the association buys and installs them, taking advantage of economies of scale.

+4.9%

National new home median price
\$238,500

Letters to Editor

- New home sales for May must be incorrect
- Many associations don't understand real estate auctions
- Auctions not always appropriate for property sales
- Public still does not understand a Realtor® does
- Tell the public more about Realtors®

"Pricing is better and timing is faster when the association does it," Kaye said. "Contractors would rather do bigger jobs than for individuals."

Owners who already have shutters when an association mandates them have to pay a share of the cost, according to Gary Poliakoff, whose Fort Lauderdale-based firm represents about 4,000 associations.

© Copyright 2006, South Florida Sun-Sentinel, Joe Kollin.
Distributed by Knight Ridder/Tribune Business News.

Questions, comments or suggestions on this page? Go to Support. Read Planet Realtor's Privacy Policy and Terms of Use.

© Copyright 2006 Florida Association of Realtors®